After the remarkable death of her father, followed by her mother's death from Alzheimer's, complicated by the death of her horse and her husband's heart surgeries, Guerrero-Murphy entered a world of mystery, in which she finds answers in dreams, metaphor, childhood memories, and living animals to the questions, "Where do the dead go, how do they speak to us, what endures, how do we go on, what are good deaths, how do we now go on?" Perhaps "it is the dark that comforts."
